Hage Token: coin of the most famous Japanese ascii art meme

1. Introduction

HAGE (pronounced: há ↓ gè) is a project that tokenizes the most famous ASCII art meme in Japan, "HAGE" was created in 2000 on 2 Channel.

This project was initiated by a Japanese artist with a budget of just 3USD and is operated with advice from multiple AIs.

HAGE means "bald" in Japanese. People with bald heads are often ridiculed by others, face disadvantages in job and marriage prospects, and are judged based on whether they have hair.

In ancient Japan, baldness was a part of the samurai's 'chonmage' hairstyle, symbolizing nobility and high status.

In ancient Greece, baldness was considered a symbol of wisdom and intelligence, with philosophers like Socrates and Plato often depicted as bald.

Buddhist monks shave their heads as a symbol of their commitment to spiritual enlightenment.

Similarly, in ancient Egypt and among the 18th-century Issini people (now Ghana), baldness represented purity and a rejection of superficiality, ritualized through regular shaving.

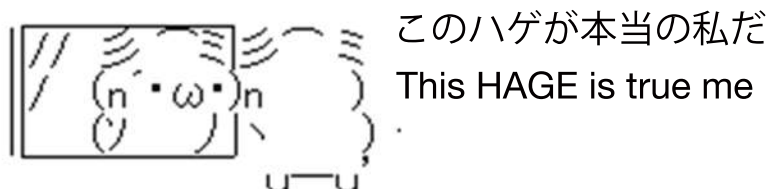

Additionally, Christian monks and Hindu priests shave their heads to symbolize celibacy, purity, and chastity.

These examples demonstrate that baldness (HAGE) is not just a hairstyle but holds cultural, religious, and social significance.

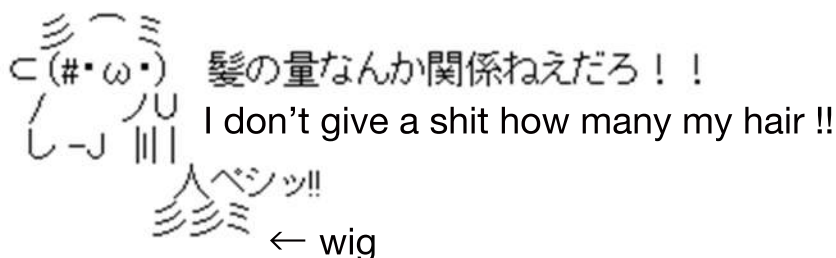

Baldness has been used as a way to express individual identity and the values of the community to which one belongs.

In the modern era, after much contemplation, HAGE looked at his reflection in the mirror one day and realized that being bald is not something to be ashamed of but rather a liberating image.

"My baldness is the true me. Let's proudly show the world the self I have been hiding until now! The liberation of the bald head!!"

HAGE decided to fight against prejudice, spread the value of baldness worldwide, and liberate HAGE through this coin that symbolizes baldness.

With a strong will to not hide the bald head but rather to push it forward and act powerfully,

HAGE aims to become the coolest in the world and reclaim "HAGE is the coolest!!"
